

If I had to prepare a time capsule the first thing I would burie underneath the ground would be a skateboard next would be a pair of shoes after that would be a baseball glove.

I would burie a pair of shoes because when people in the future digges it up they will compare how different are shoes were then thers.

After that I would wanna burie a skateboared because in the future they will probably have hover boards and I would want them to see how it was to skate in the past.

Next I would burie a baseball glove because baseball gloves change so much over time and I would want them to see how are looked in the past.

So If I could prepare a time clapsule then are the three things I would want them to dig up in the future.

This response reflects limited proficiency in expository writing skills. The writer chooses a pair of shoes, a skateboard, and a baseball glove to be enclosed in a time capsule. Inadequate explanation of the selected items is provided within a limited organizational structure. In addition, the response displays an accumulation of errors in writing conventions.
